1. Introduction

For decades, the Mediterranean diet (MD) has been acknowledged as one of the healthiest lifestyles due to the different studies that support its proven health benefits. However, one of the main problems is that there is a need of support for decision-makers when creating context-specific policies that can translate the MD benefits into profitable interventions to increase its adherence in the countries surrounding the Mediterranean Sea.

This report contains a review of regional/national policies and Smart Specialization Strategies collected from each partner that could favour MD and tourism.

2. Methodology

All the deliverables on Activity 3.1 – Building up Mediterranean diet knowledge from D3.1.1 to D3.1.5 have followed a similar methodology.

They have been completed through Excel templates sent by the MDF filled by the partners together with protocols that contained the explanation of all the items and information requested.

The templates for D3.1.1 to D3.1.5 were sent to all the partners on July 6th, 2018 to be completed on August 13th, 2018. There has been a series of deadline extensions due to the fact that some templates were not received on time. The last template for Activity 3.1 was received January 7th, 2019.

As all data was being received it was put together to be analysed, homogenized and some information had to be searched and complemented by the MDF. A partner report was sent on January 8th, 2019 with the state of the art and some doubts on their work to be answered, if needed, until January 14th, 2019.

Each template has been analysed following an A, B and C system:

- A: lack of information, blank space – this data has been included after being reviewed by the MDF experts with the collaboration of the partner and based on reliable data always using the original source provided by the partner, whenever possible.
- B: data included with a different format from the one requested originally – this data has been reviewed by the MDF experts with the collaboration of the partner and based on reliable data always using the original source provided by the partner, whenever possible.
- C: wrong / incongruous data – this data has been reviewed by the MDF experts with the collaboration of the partner and based on reliable data always using the original source provided by the partner, whenever possible.

Whenever a partner included different data from different dates, a separate table had to be created to avoid any type of confusion.

4. Conclusions

Important studies have shown that the Mediterranean Diet pattern is one of the healthiest, providing both short and long-term benefits. The next step would be to implement policies that promote and help the population adhere more solidly to this pattern, especially the countries surrounding the Mediterranean Sea. For this reason, the WHO published a report in 2018 to evaluate the implementation of food policies related to the Mediterranean Diet and the Nordic Diet (a different food pattern, which recent studies confirmed as healthy).

In the Interreg Med-MD.net project, the different policies related to the Mediterranean Diet implemented in each territory have been analyzed, based on the data provided by the different partners. Thus, a total of 128 policies have been collected, both national (57) and local (71). Catalonia (39) and Emilia-Romagna (20) are the two regions where the most food policies have been reported in favor of the promotion of the Mediterranean Diet, with Split-Dalmatia, Crete, Cyprus and Slovenia being those that do so to a lesser extent.

Another fact that is observed is the increase in these policies in the last two decades, which shows the progressive interest of public administrations in consolidating this food pattern among the population, to promote health and safeguard this millenary heritage.
